

Author Disclosure of Potential Conflict of Interest

Public trust in the peer review process and the credibility of published articles depends in part on how well conflict of interest is handled during writing, peer review, and the editorial decision-making process. Conflict of interest exists when an author of a manuscript or a letter to the editor (or the author's department, division, center, or clinical practice), a reviewer, or an editor has financial or personal relationships with other persons or organizations that could inappropriately influence (bias) his or her actions. Furthermore, any interest that may raise the perception of conflict of interest or bias should also be considered to represent a potential conflict of interest. Disclosure of author conflict of interest will be published along with the manuscript, if the manuscript is accepted. It will not be disclosed to reviewers of the manuscript and will have no bearing upon acceptance or rejection of the manuscript, which will be evaluated on its scientific merit.

This questionnaire must be completed and must be signed by every author of the above-referenced work (the "Work") and returned to The Journal office at the time of manuscript submission. The Journal will not publish any Work or make any commitment or agreement to publish any Work until The Journal receives a completed questionnaire signed by all authors of the Work. Failure to accurately and fully disclose a conflict of interest by an author will, upon discovery, be reported to the author's university, institution, employer, and/or funding agency.

The intent of this statement is to ensure complete disclosure. If you are in any doubt as to whether a source of funding or other benefit(s) constitutes a conflict of interest or might be so construed, err on the side of disclosure. The questions herein are intended to help you and must be answered.
